FOREWORD

Educational Preparation for Public Administration: A Catalog of Graduate Programs, 1952-53, is the fourth edition of this guide to educational programs in the field of public administration. It differs from previous editions in that it describes only those programs leading to a graduate degree with major emphasis in public administration, whereas previous editions have included undergraduate programs as well. Public Administration Clearing House makes no attempt in this guide to present an evaluation of programs; it has simply compiled information reported in a comprehensive questionnaire which was sent to a large number of colleges and universities.

This booklet lists information about graduate public administration programs in 105 colleges and universities. The programs reported reveal two major types of organization for the teaching of public administration; namely, the specialized school of public administration and the political science department which encompasses public administration as an integral part of political science. More than 40 universities offer a graduate degree beyond the Master's with major emphasis in public administration. A thesis or dissertation is usually required for a Doctor's degree although that fact may not always be noted here. An intern program and/or field training is offered by 54 institutions.

The information as presented here has been approved by the institutions concerned; however, it can serve only as a guide to the programs. Complete information may be obtained by writing to the person in charge of a particular program.

Information about graduate assistance appears here in brief form. Most schools have many forms of special and general assistance available to qualified students. Additional information about assistance may be obtained from the following publications:

Feingold, S. Norman. Scholarships, Fellowships and Loans (Boston: Bellman Publishing Company, Inc., 1949). 2 vols.

UNESCO. Study Abroad (New York: Columbia University Press, 1952). Vol IV.

Wilkins, Theresa Birch. Scholarships and Fellowships Available at Institutions of Higher Learning (Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1951).
A publication of the U.S. Office of Education.

Donald Mensinger, formerly of the staff of Public Administration Clearing House, was responsible for the major part of the work leading to this publication, including collection and analysis of data and development of format.

Public Administration Clearing House appreciates the cooperation of the colleges and universities that have supplied the information that makes this publication possible.

INSTITUTION

DESCRIPTION OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
Chicago 37 Illinois

Department of Political Science

Leonard D. White, Professor of Public Administration

(Private; coed; 7,890)

Objective: Within the framework of a general political science program, to acquaint students with the history, theoretical bases, and role of administration in a democratic society, with the goal of producing competent teachers, researchers, and practitioners of administration.

Course Work: Lack of emphasis on techniques of administration, the more purely vocational aspects of training; emphasis on history and theory of administration and the development of research in administration.

Thesis required for the M.A.; reading knowledge of one language for Ph.D.

Related Programs: School of Social Service Administration; Planning Program; Committee on International Relations.

CLAREMONT GRADUATE SCHOOL
Claremont, California

Committee on Political Economy
Floyd A. Bond, Chairman
W. B. Taylor, Advisor, Business and Public Administration

(Private; coed; 508)

Objective: To train for teaching and/or public service.

Course Work: Faculty in political economy offers graduate programs in four areas of concentration: political economy, economics, government, and business and public administration. For purposes of program planning, the combined areas of economics, government, and business administration are divided into nine subject matter fields: economic theory; political theory and institutions; public law and government regulation of business; administrative organization and personnel; politics and legislation; public and private finance; international politics and economics; accounting, statistics, and mathematics; and economic history. Candidates for the M.A. degree must show competence in examinations in four of the nine fields.

Thesis required for M.A.; two languages for the Ph.D.

UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO
Boulder, Colorado

Graduate Curriculum in Public
Administration
Leo C. Riethmayer, Chairman

(State; coed; 8,869)

Objective: Curriculum in Public Administration provides advanced study and training for students who wish to enter some field of government service--national, state, or local--or who wish preparation for research or administrative positions in organizations, such as governmental research bureaus, municipal leagues, civic associations, and citizen agencies, which have a direct relationship to the work of public administration.

Course Work: With the cooperation of various departments and schools of the University, students may select advanced work which will contribute not only to a broader knowledge of the problems of government and administration, but to an understanding of their interrelations and social implications. Work in this field necessarily cuts across departmental lines and is organized around the student's principal focus of interest; it is therefore administered by a special Committee on Public Administration.

Thesis generally required but exceptions possible under alternate plans in special cases; no foreign language requirements unless nature of student's program necessitates the use of a foreign language.

Related Programs: International Affairs.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
New York 27 New York

Department of Public Law and Government

Arthur W. Macmahon, Eaton Professor of Public Administration

John D. Millett, Professor of Public Administration

(Private; coed; 27,636)

Objective: To conserve and advance knowledge about public administration as an essential phase of the governmental process. Program based on the belief that entry to the public service must be along professional lines, rather than specific training in public administration.

Course Work: Program at Columbia is not intended to train for professional purposes but rather to advance knowledge in the field of political processes; accordingly, emphasis is on the preservation and advancement of knowledge in the field of government.

Thesis required for M.A.; two languages for the Ph.D.

Related Programs: Professional programs in Social Welfare; Architecture and City Planning.

UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT
Storrs, Connecticut

Department of Government and International Relations
Max R. White, Acting Head

(State; coed; 7,853)

Objective: Preparation for governmental research and public service.

Course Work: Emphasis on governmental research and local government; federal and state government. Program worked out on an individual basis to meet each student's needs.

Not less than 15 semester hours with a thesis; not less than 24 hours without thesis for M.A.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY
Ithaca, New York

School of Business and Public
Administration
Edward H. Litchfield, Professor of Administration

(State and Private; coed;
10,115)

Objective: To train the student in the universals of the administrative process as found in all large-scale enterprises; to acquaint him with the analytical techniques which management requires; and to specifically make him aware of the particular aspects of public administration on local, state, federal, and international levels.

Course Work: Concentrations offered on municipal and state, federal and international levels of government, and also in the processes of personnel management and fiscal management. Comparative administration is not a concentration but an additional area in which to apply the universals of the management process about which the School as a whole is organized. The work in the several levels of public administration is intended not so much as a description of the ephemeral characteristics and practices of public agencies, as it is an illustration of varying aspects of the process itself.

No thesis requirement for M.P.A.; language urged for students concentrating in international administration.

Related Programs: Regional planning in the School of Architecture; area study program in Southeast Asia.

NEW SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL RESEARCH
66 W. 12th Street
New York 11 New York

Graduate Faculty of Political and Social Science
Arnold Brecht, Professor of Political Science, Jurisprudence
and Public Finance

(Private; coed; 994)

Objective: Graduate Faculty does not favor exclusive training in special techniques of administration to the prejudice of thorough study of political and economic problems. It considers a well-rounded program in the social sciences, supplemented in some cases by studies in other fields, the most desirable preparation for public administrators, believing that public administration is a dynamic force rather than a static service apparatus.

Course Work: Students entering public administration are encouraged to consider the general Faculty program as the basis of their preparation with particular attention to governmental and administrative problems, and to those subjects on which their administrative activities may focus. Courses offered in general studies, American administration, international administration and financial and economic administration. Some emphasis on comparative administration.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM
IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION
Universities of Alabama, Kentucky and Tennessee

Albert Lepawsky, Educational
Director

Objective: To encourage the training of executive leaders and skilled administrators for the management of public affairs in the South, primarily at the state, local or regional level.

Course Work: Each fellow in the Southern Regional Training Program spends approximately three months as an intern in a public office in the Southern region. The balance of the academic year is spent in further training and study on the campuses of the three participating institutions. The fall quarter is spent at the University of Alabama, the winter quarter at the University of Tennessee, and the spring quarter at the University of Kentucky. The university study program includes regular university courses, special courses, lectures by public officials, and conferences and consultations. At the end of the twelve-month training period, those who complete the work satisfactorily receive a certificate in public administration issued jointly by the three participating universities. Those who elect to do so may continue their work for a fifth quarter, leading to the degree of Master of Arts at one of the three universities.

Thesis required for the M.A.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY
Palo Alto, California

Department of Political Science
Robert A. Walker, Associate
Professor

(Private; coed; 7,717)

Objective: To prepare students with an intelligent understanding of public problems for participation in government as administrators or for research or teaching.

Course Work: Emphasis on nature of organization and general administrative principles that are applicable to all levels of public and private organizations. Attention to problems of federal administration, international administration, and scope and method of administration. It is recommended that students take the general course in public administration together with work in as many of the following areas as possible: administrative behavior, public control of the economy, personnel management, and planning. In addition, course work in sociology, psychology and anthropology is encouraged.

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY
Syracuse 10 New York

Maxwell Graduate School of
Citizenship and Public Affairs
Roscoe C. Martin, Chairman,
Department of Political Science

(Private; coed; 16,007)

Objective: Central purpose of each program is to provide a general acquaintance with public administration in the political environment of a democratic society. In addition, attention given to technical training designed to help those who complete one of the programs to enter public service in positions at a junior professional level.

Course Work: Program I. Designed to offer a body of knowledge common to all phases of public administration, with emphasis on staff functions. Courses are especially created and arranged in end-to-end sequence and are not taken simultaneously; students progress from courses of general orientation to those of more specific techniques and processes. Six credit hour course in administrative writing and research required in lieu of the formal thesis.

Program II. M.P.A. sequence consisting of three cores built chiefly on regular classroom courses. The first core is concerned primarily with "technique" administration; the second includes subjects in the more general field of administration; and the third permits course work in any cognate department of the University. Six credit hour course in administrative writing and research required in lieu of thesis.

Program III. Economics-Public Administration program designed to train students for careers in the public or quasi-public service with emphasis on employment in positions involving economic research or economic training. Thesis required.

Program IV. D.P.A. program designed to serve those individuals now in the public service who have had a year of graduate study in public administration and those who may want to enter the teaching profession. The Ph.D. degree is based on three years of graduate study and leads primarily (though not necessarily) to a career in teaching.

Program at Albany. A program sponsored jointly with New York University. Intended primarily to encourage the professional growth and develop the administrative capacity of persons employed in the state service. On completion of the prescribed course of study, which features courses offered by regular faculty members of the participating universities, student receives the Master's degree of the university in which he has chosen to matriculate.
